Coffee prices are seeing support from news of continued dry conditions in Brazil. Somar Meteorologia, the Meteorological Agency in Brazil on Monday reported that Minas Gerais, a region that accounts for about 30% of Brazil's Arabica crop received no rain last week.

Tightness in ICE-monitored Arabica coffee inventories and smaller coffee supplies from Colombia are also supportive of Arabica prices. The National Federation of Coffee Growers reported last Wednesday that Colombia's July coffee production fell by 22% over the year to 944,000 bags. Colombia is the world's second-largest producer of Arabica beans.
