Coffee prices moved higher on Wednesday, with Arabica up at a 1.5-week high as concerns that adverse weather events worldwide will disrupt global coffee production support coffee prices. Somar Meteorologia, The metrological agency in Brazil reported on Monday that Brazil's largest Arabica coffee-growing area, had received only 33.4 mm of rain during the week ended October 31, or 75% of the historical average. That followed only 1% of normal rain in the previous week. Also, a Typhoon is forecast to make landfall in Vietnam on Thursday or Friday and could cause damage to Robusta crops in Vietnam's coffee-growing areas.
